

The Report of the EEOC Select Task Force on Harassment in the Workplace

Harassment issues never seem to go away, no matter what we try. So, the EEOC assembled a select task force of experts from business, academia, advocacy and government to help address the question of why workplace harassment persists and offer recommendations on how to address it. In this session you will hear the results of their work. You will learn how harassment is a pervasive problem in the workplace, and you will discover why most people do not report harassment to their employers. You will hear the risk factors that contribute to harassment. And, you will learn about civility and bystander training and why combining them with traditional compliance training is a better way to address the problem.
